Typically, film is cut at a processing facility based upon output from a packaging machine in which the film is fed from a roll of the film. The packaging machines typically receive the film from a width controlling mechanism such as rollers. While cutting the film at a fixed length (i.e., the output length of the film from the packaging machine) requires no control, it is desirable to precisely control the lengths of the individual packaging. For instance, it is preferable to precisely control the lengths of the packaging to meet the specifications of the packaging (e.g., width, length and volume). This allows a consumer to purchase and receive the exact length of the package desired. Accordingly, it is a general object of the present invention to provide an improved method and apparatus for controlling film lengths, and more specifically, for precisely controlling the lengths of packaging provided by a packaging machine.mcclurephilip JL I can tell you with certainty you will not win or even come close on your holiday budget!
